Chapter 1 by Kira Atkinson (Kira Cupcake)

My mother always told me that she would always be looking over me, making sure I was safe. The night she died these were the last words she said to me, "I'll always be looking over you." I always told her that wasn't possible and to stop being silly, but now I realise that she wasn't lying and she is always watching me.

At first I was grateful for this security. When I saw her shadow at the end of my bed, or when I turned to corner. Every test I took I would see a figure there that I knew was my mother and every so often I would hear her say her famous phrase, "I'll always be looking over you." People I told never believed me and said it was just grief. It wasn't grief at all. She was there. I saw her. I'm still seeing her. She's right there in the corner of my room.

When she was alive she was warm and comforting, and after she died she somehow was still warm and comforting, and now something has changed.

Chapter 2 by SaintSayaka

The thing is. she won't leave me alone.

I'm glad that she cares so much about me. I'm honored, truthfully. But this is getting ridiculous. She looks over my shoulder when I'm in the shower, in high school, and even sleeps in the same room as me. I don't want to live like this. I don't want to live without her feelings.

It's funny how little has changed, even through death. I suppose I should be grateful. It's made the transition easier on myself.
